nine new faculty added to six departments

wartburg continues its strive for excellence

Nine faculty members joined the Wartburg community in the fall. Three of the faculty were added to the communication arts department.

Cliff Brockman works as a general lecturer in communication arts and specializes in convergence.

Also joining the department was Jim Loving, who formerly worked in Minneapolis. Pam Ohrt switched mediums this year to an assistant professor of communication arts in electronic media. Ohrt will also be the adviser for KWAR, the college's radio station.

The science department hired Johanna Foster, associate professor of biology.

"I truly love to study ecology," she said. "What's exciting about Wartburg is that I have that opportunity to perform this research with students."

Neil Martinsen-Burrell was named assistant professor of mathematics. He was previously a post-doctoral research associate at the University of North Carolina.

Amy Nolan, who taught at Michigan State University, is an assistant professor of English.

David Hagan was appointed assistant professor of French.

Erika Lindgren, an assistant professor of history, has a degree in medieval studies. She formally taught at the University of Arizona.

Added as an assistant professor of music, Brian Pfalzgraff, previously taught at Southern Illinois University.

Outfly is all about tradition, and some students are establishing a stinging one, a tradition that by piercing, probing and puncturing — could last a lifetime.

When Outfly was announced Monday, Oct. 9, many Wartburg students used their day off to get tattoos or piercings, an activity that is becoming more popular each Outfly.

More than 30 Wartburg students went to Omega Red Piercing in Cedar Falls for piercing and tattoos, according to owner Mike French.

French said Omega Red has been open for six years, and this year he distributed coupons for $5 off all piercings during Outfly.

Sarah Witte, got her second tattoo on Outfly and said she was happy with her experience at Omega Red.

Witte's first tattoo was a dove on the top of her foot, and this time she got music notes on her ankle. To her, tattoos are about something permanent and meaningful.

"The music notes are from one of my favorite songs, 'For Good' from 'Wicked,'" she said.

When tattoos and piercings are mentioned, people usually express concerns about the perceptions of people, including future employers.

"Both of my tattoos are in places where they are not easily seen and can be covered up if need be," Witte said. "I like subtlety when it comes to both tattoos and piercing."

Cody Eklov, a junior, also went to Omega Red. He had his piercing stretched, just because he felt like it. His tattoo, however, is a different story.

"I wanted a tattoo, and I wanted it to mean something," Eklov said.

The tattoo of a crown of thorns and two nails on his back expresses his faith.

Tattoos and piercings have become popular among teenagers and 20-year-olds. Witte recognizes this trend and has mixed emotions.

"I think there are some really neat ones, but I think sometimes people go overboard," she said.

Experts at the Mayo Clinic say there are many risks involved.

Scott Kempel poses for the Wartburg Hunks calendar.

A calendar featuring at least 12 Wartburg males, a Wartburg Hunks Calendar, was sold to help finance a student-led winter break service trip to Denver. Other service groups planned a variety of fund-raising projects to support winter trips.

The calendar was designed by Amanda Lundberg, Katie Schwartzkopf and Katie Ryan, who participated in the March trip.

Ryan and Schwartzkopf led the trip, which involved working with the Sobriety House, Inc. in Denver to repair rehabilitation rooms for recovering alcoholics. All sales from the calendar benefited the service trip.

"We thought it would be funny, since we're one of the only all-girl service trips," Schwartzkopf said. She said an informal poll was conducted among some Wartburg students to determine the calendar candidates, who were then approached about photo shoots.

The calendar was printed by the Royal Paper Company and cost $12. The calendar was available to the entire campus, but Wartburg's female students and friends of the calendar's subjects were the biggest buyers. "It'd be fun to have [a calendar] with their friends in it," she said.

Despite a couple photos Lundberg called controversial, the group did not expect much debate from the student body. She said the calendar was produced just for fun and was not meant to offend anybody.

Other winter break service trips offered fundraising products as well. Tyler Vachta and Reda Chester, led a Central City Lutheran Mission group to San Bernardino, Calif. and sold Rada culinary knives.

wartburg choir in prague

students packed their bags for a once-in-a-life time holiday adventure

The Wartburg Choir sang with the Czech National Orchestra in December, said Steve Hennigs, choir president.

The director of the Czech orchestra selected the choir after hearing them perform in Chicago last year.

"He takes one choir in the entire world for this experience, and we were fortunate enough to be selected," Hennigs said.

The Wartburg Choir traveled Dec. 14-23 and performed in Prague and Eisenach, Germany. "The choir performed Christmas with Wartburg for the first time ever overseas," Hennings said.

Emily Fairchild, said the choir kept busy when they were not performing. "We rehearsed and explored Prague," she said.

Fairchild said that each student was allowed to secure a small loan from the college to pay for the trip, but the cost didn't deter her from participating. "I love choir because it gave me multiple opportunities for once-in-a-lifetime experiences," she said.

The Iowa tour of Christmas with Wartburg began Thursday, Nov. 30, in Neumann Auditorium.

Mr. Wartburg was a little squirrely this year. Junior Josh Sinram was crowned Mr. Wartburg 2007 after showing his school spirit by dressing up as one of the many squirrels that inhabit campus.

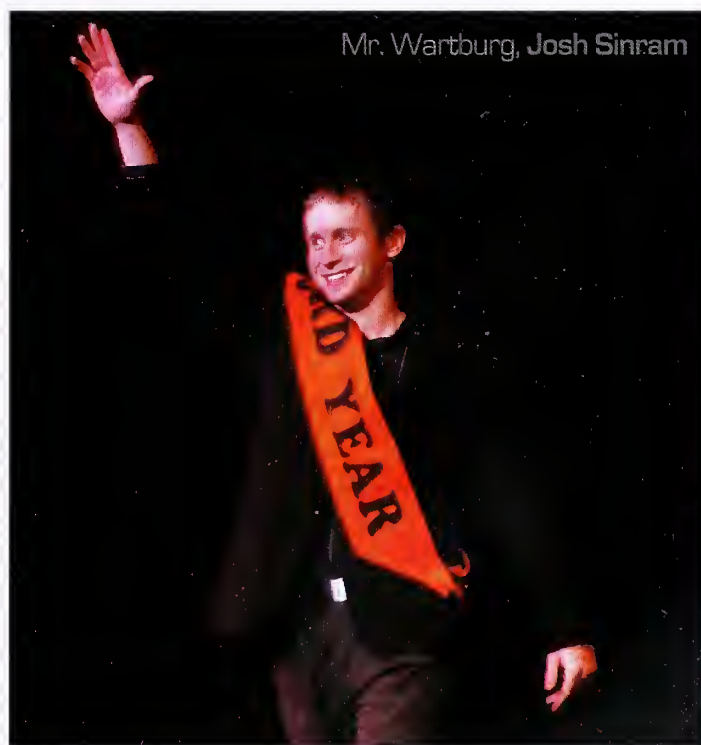

After a choreographed dance by the contestants, emcees Ann Arns and Kevin Fiene kicked Monday's event off by introducing the panel of judges. Justin Peters, Monica Severson, Tara Price, Penni Pier, Pam Ohrt and John Myers scored the contestants in the pick-up line competition and the question portion of the competition.

Pick-up lines ranged from the cheesy — "Are you a Wartburg parking ticket? Because you got fine written all over you!" — to the hilarious: "Hey beautiful, does this washcloth smell like chloroform?"

The top five contestants were picked based on their scores from those two categories. The final five then performed a talent for the crowd, ranging from rap to dance to pondering the questions of life.

Sinram gave an acceptance speech after he was crowned, thanking "all the judges. That was nice of you."

Helen Thomas chastised and challenged journalists and berated President George Bush during a series of appearances on campus in March.

She also expressed opinions concerning the Iraq war, 2008 presidential candidates and discrimination against women in the press and politics.

Thomas' main focus was America's involvement in the Iraq war. She said that her colleagues of the media failed society by not asking "why?"

When President Bush first declared the U.S. was going to war, no reporters asked why, she said. Thomas said they were afraid to "rock the boat." She added that journalists have a duty to ask questions to prevent the government from deceiving society. "The press gave up its one weapon: skepticism," Thomas said.

"Don't stop asking questions because if you don't ask, no one will, and they won't be held accountable," she said. Regarding the Iraq War, Thomas said at a press conference that presidential candidate John Edwards has the best plan: getting out.

Thomas believes the important issues of the 2008 presidential election will be health care, health insurance and the environment, while gay marriage and abortion will fade as key issues.

At a private dinner, Thomas said that America is ready for a female president, but she doesn't believe it will happen in 2008.

dean of students search nets replacement

Deborah Loers replaced Lex Smith in July as Wartburg's new vice president of student life and dean of students. Loers was the dean of student development at Willamette University in Salem, Ore.

Loers said she believes colleges like Wartburg contribute a lot to students' lives. "I saw a lot of exciting and positive things when I visited campus, like committed and excited students, faculty and staff and President Jack Ohle's leadership."

According to David McCullough, head of the search committee, Loers' initiatives for bridging the gap between service learning, academics and athletics are the qualities that made her a stand-out candidate.

"This was a national search for a high caliber position, so we had to look for the best people," McCullough said. "We had 80 qualified candidates."

McCullough said bringing the campus together by integrating the academic and athletic aspects of the college is an important part of the position and is vital to the students because of Wartburg's strong athletic and academic departments.

"Students are at a critical stage in transition from high school to college and college to the real world," McCullough said. He said Loers has great communication skills and will be able to connect easily with students, faculty and staff.

Loers believes that cooperative work among different programs on campus not only enhance the different departments but also the students' experiences. She said it is ideal for programs at the college to be seamlessly connected to each other.
